The news comes as a surprise to many, as Sunde had been expecting a more lenient sentence of a mere six months at most. According to a statement from Friis Larsen, his lawyer, Sunde's sentence will be appealed, and he will not serve a single day behind bars. The 27-year-old's sentence was "shockingly severe" because he had no prior convictions, and had consistently cooperated with the police, lawyer Friis Larsen told AP. Criminal charges were brought against The Pirate Bay founder, most notably due to Sweden's new "hacking law" which criminalises and awards large fines to those who "aid or enable" copyright infringement. The Pirate Bay, however, could not be found guilty under the new laws as they were designed for only material hosted in Sweden, and as the site is Swedish-based it was not liable to the new laws. The ruling in the trial, which ran from 2011 to 2013, came down in February 2013, but Sunde's conviction was put on hold so he could appeal. Sunde is one of the few Pirate Bay contributors who have not been sentenced yet. Two others on the site, Gottfrid Svartholm and Kristian "kringkul" Åkerblom, also face charges in the country. Both are in Sweden, and the pair have pleaded not guilty. Update: Sunde issued a statement after being convicted in which he appealed against his sentence. "Today I have been convicted of an unrelated offense. However, this does not diminish my conviction for copyright infringement, which is what the court has stated. Because this conviction is not related to the issues under appeal, it will not be lifted." "It is unfortunate that I have to spend the next eight weeks in prison. This was not
